Chapter 9: Cell Signaling

9.1 Principles of Cell Communication

Cells communicate using chemical signals that bind to specific receptors.

Cellular communication contains 4 essential elements:

1. Signaling cell
2. Signaling molecule – carries info from one cell to the next
3. Receptor protein
4. Responding cell

Signaling involves receptor activation, signal transduction, response, and termination.

1. Receptor Activation – on binding the signal, receptor is turned on, or activated – usually by causing conformational change
2. Signal transduction – receptor triggers a series of downstream events
3. Response - varies
4. Termination – cellular response is stopped

9.2 Cell Signaling over Long and Short Distances

Cell communication can occur between individual organisms or between cells within same organism.

- Far apart – transport by circulatory system
- Close – moves by diffusion

Endocrine signaling acts over long distances.

- Through bloodstream

Paracrine signaling acts over short distances

- Move by diffusion
- The signal is growth factor – small water soluble molecule
- Causes responding cell to grow, divide, or differentiate
- Present in platelets
- Special form of short range signaling is neuron communication

Autocrine signaling is when the responding cell and the signaling cell are the same – within same cell

- Important to multicellular cells during embryo development.

Signaling can occur by direct cell-cell contact
