This book examines the relationship between Arctic communities and extractive resource development. With insights from leading thinkers in the field, the book examines this relationship to better understand what, if anything, can be done in order for the development of non-renewable resources to be of benefit to the long-term sustainability of these communities. The contributions synthesize circumpolar research on the topic of resource extraction in the Arctic and highlight areas that need further investigation, such as the ability of northern communities to properly use current regulatory processes, fiscal arrangements, and benefit agreements to ensure the long-term sustainability of their culture communities and to avoid a new path dependency. This book provides an insightful summary of issues surrounding resource extraction in the Arctic and will be essential reading for anyone interested in environmental impact assessments, globalization, and Indigenous communities and the future of the Arctic region. Social Assessment in Natural Resource Management Institutions Nick Taylor, Marcus Benjamin Lane, 2001 This book is the first significant international attempt to outline and analyze how social assessment has been integrated within natural resource management institutions to date. In doing so, it focuses on contemporary Australian and New Zealand experiences and relates these back to the international context. Social Assessment in Natural Resource Management Institutions provides practical guidance for a wide range of planners, managers, and stakeholders striving for better integration of social issues. The lessons derived are equally relevant to national, provincial, regional, and local governance structures, international agencies, corporations, and community-based non-government organizations.
