

Change Management Procedure

Q2-331-PR

1.0 Purpose and Scope

- 1.1 The purpose of this procedure is to ensure that risks associated with changes during the life of a project are managed.
- 1.2 This procedure applies to all projects. The Project Manager (PM) is primarily responsible for implementing this procedure, unless noted otherwise.
- 1.3 In managing change, we should be maximizing benefit, such as growing the project or influencing the factors that result in positive change. The changes may affect the project scope, budget, schedule, resources, reporting, technical requirements or other elements of the project. A change in one area may affect many areas of the project. For example:
 - A change to the scope is likely to affect time and cost.
 - A change to a design parameter, such as flood level, may not affect time and cost, but it is likely to affect other design elements such as earthworks and structures.
 - A change to the project team may require training or assigning more experienced staff — at AECOM's cost.

2.0 Terms and Definitions

None

3.0 References

- 3.1 Project Plan Procedure
- 3.2 Project Risk Management Procedure
- 3.3 Project Document and Records Control Procedure
- 3.4 Checking and Verification Procedure

4.0 Procedure

Changes may occur at any time during a project and be either external (client, stakeholder, regulatory) or internal (assignments, resources).

Project Managers (PMs) shall consider the following approach when managing change in a project:

- Determine the nature of the change that will or has occurred;
- Obtain appropriate approvals associated with the change;
- Record and reflect the change in relevant project documentation, and at least in the Project Plan and Schedule;
- Ensure all stakeholders (e.g., client, subconsultant, AECOM team) are notified of the change; and
- Manage and document the change and effect on the project (i.e., costs, risk, resources, quality, etc.).

Key elements that shall be noted while managing change include:

- 4.1 Change Evaluation
 - 4.1.1 In evaluating the change, the Project Managers shall ensure that the change is truly necessary; the effects of the change are assessed and quantified; and if the change is in response to a client request, there is a clear understanding and agreement regarding the variation in scope of work and fees, prior to completion of the work.
