Case Study Drivers of Industry Financial Structure

Executive Summary

KR+H is a manufactory company in the cabinet industry and it had devised a unique operating strategy of producing high-quality custom cabinets at a low cost. Because the investments will reduce costs and increase the working efficiency in manufacturing process. And the analysis will show that adding investment is valuable and profitable. Based on KR+H's past financial performance and the cost of investment, KR+H would need additional financing to fund the proposed capital investment. The internal financing could be very difficult for KR+H based on it had a deficit in 1992. And internal financing may also slow down the investments because KR+H has to retain its profit. Also rising the price is not a very good option in a long-term perspective. Because it could retard their growth and therefore did not represent a viable path to long-term profitability. So we suggest that KR+H should finance the proposed capital by relying on external financing from a bank or an outside investor.

Context

KR+H is a manufactory company that designs, fabricates, and installs high quality, uniquely designed cabinetry. Now it had devised a unique operating strategy of producing high-quality custom cabinets at a low cost. KR+H believes that the use of computer-controlled equipment allowed the firm to significantly reduce its labor cost and another production cost while increasing the efficiency of the manufacturing process. In order to support the development of its innovative operating system, KR+H needs to clearly define the scope and speed of growth for their business. However, the partners do not have internal funds to finance the investment and their access to external capital markets is limited. Therefore KR+H needs a better operating and financial strategy for managing rapid growth and its capital. I think the article "Seize advantage in a downturn" is very helpful. Many companies fail to see the opportunities hidden in economic downturns. In order to take advantage of opportunities, KR+H first needs to do a thorough but rapid assessment of its own vulnerabilities and then move decisively to minimize them. KR+H could approach their problem by using some of those steps introduced in this article such as Monitor and maximize its cash position.

1. Evaluating the capital position: In the cash flow statement Exhibit 6, the net decrease in cash by $15,298 in 1991 and $46,955 in 1992. In order to meet cash requirement during 1992, KR+H gets a personal loan about $35,000 and the bank overdraft to cover its deficit about $14,000, which shows us that KR+H are short of cash during the past years and it gets worse. Based on KR+H's past financial performance and the cost of investment, KR+H would need additional financing to fund the proposed capital investment for sure.
2. Adding investment is valuable and profitable: I think t
