

BIOMES

Name: _____

Earth is an amazing planet. It has many different environments that make perfect homes for millions of species. The largest major habitats that exist worldwide are known as biomes. Most likely, you're already familiar with many of these: desert, rainforest, grassland, etc. Each biome is unique and therefore essential to sustaining the life that calls it home. Conservation of all habitats is crucial for maintaining biodiversity, or the amazing variety of life that makes our Earth so abundant in wonder and natural resources.

How many biomes are there? Do all water environments constitute a single aquatic biome? Are all tree filled ecosystems considered a forest biome? The number of biomes you split the world into simply depends on how specific you'd like to be. Let's take a look at some of the largest biomes, and the abiotic and biotic factors that define them.

Marine

Freshwater

Aquatic Biomes

Since water covers over 70% of the Earth, the largest biomes are the aquatic biomes. Minor aquatic biomes include coral reefs and estuaries, but the two major ones are the marine and freshwater biomes.

The marine biome, made up of the world's oceans, is so big it's usually divided into layers based on depth. Believe it or not, the deep sea is actually 4 times larger than all of Earth's other habitats combined! The movement of water in the marine biome creates ocean currents which play a major role in creating weather worldwide.

Smaller freshwater biomes consist of lakes, ponds, and rivers. These are different from the marine biome because they do not contain salt. Freshwater biomes are especially important to us humans as they provide the water that we use to drink! All aquatic biomes provide homes for diverse plant and animal life. Algae and other plants provide oxygen through photosynthesis for fish, birds, frogs, whales, and other aquatic species.

Savanna

Grassland

Grassland biomes live up to their name! They're made up of grasses and very few trees. The two major grassland biomes are the savanna and temperate grassland.

The savanna is a hot biome that covers half of Africa and large parts of Australia. These areas have a 6-8 month wet season in the summer and then a dry winter. Expect to find animals like elephants, zebras, and giraffes in a savanna.

The temperate grasslands, on the other hand, make up the plains of middle America. In the temperate grassland you'll find a hot summer and a cold winter along with
