approfondire il ruolo della disciplina della rappresentazione come guida nell'interpretazione delle morfologie spaziali per persone con compromissioni percettive. Dal confronto dei dati di output delle ricerche studiate scaturisce l'esigenza di linee guida per la progettazione delle ambientazioni virtuali che superando le lacune delle precedenti sperimentazioni tenga conto di tutti i fattori analizzati nelle fasi di studio: preliminari fattori umani ed ergonomici percettivi, educativi di inclusività e in cui la disciplina della rappresentazione ponendosi come tramite interdisciplinare fornisca gli strumenti operativi più opportuni per il raggiungimento degli obiettivi prefissati. Attraverso un'adeguata interpretazione dei codici spaziali guidata dagli strumenti di analisi e comunicazione delle discipline ICAR 17 lo studio approda alla definizione di uno strumento di indirizzo per la progettazione di ambienti virtuali autism friendly dove il patrimonio architettonico diventi medium di inclusione e comunicazione del suo valore culturale. Il ridisegno di uno spazio configurato sulle specificità di un'utenza più debole ha come ulteriore ricaduta l'esito di estendere in modo indiscriminato la possibilità di accesso alla cultura dal momento che migliorare il rapporto con lo spazio può aiutare a migliorare anche il rapporto con noi stessi e con gli altri.

English: The research belongs to the disciplinary field of drawing disciplines focusing attention on autism's needs and aiming at guiding the architectural space perception using virtual reality. The drawing disciplines providing an interpretation of spatial syntax become an interdisciplinary medium to observe with a new perspective the output data of the experimentation, this way incisively contributing to a field of research hitherto dominated only by medical, pedagogical and technological disciplines. The interdisciplinary research methodology integrates the joint visions of multiple theoretical fields in addition to the more specific one of drawing, also the ergonomic, pedagogical, museum sector and the neuroscience area. The author aims to fill some gaps found in the investigated context about human perceptual answers to the VR representation, shifting the focus of attention from the technological aspects of the digital tool to the user. This way the research increases the potential of virtual reality as an educational and inclusive medium. Starting from these assumptions, the study deals with a profound analysis of the perceptive responses in the relationship between man and architectural space both in the neurotypical context and in the autistic scenario to explore the role of the drawings discipline as a guide in the interpretation of spatial morphologies for people with perceptual impairments. Comparing the analytical phase's output data, the research develops the main design objectives aimed at developing the guidelines tool for the autism friendly virtual environment design. This way it overcomes the gaps of previous experiments considering all the factors analyzed in the preliminary study phases: human and ergonomic factors, perceptive, educational and inclusive. The drawing disciplines acting as an interdisciplinary medium provide the most appropriate operational tools for achieving the preset objectives. The redesign of a space customized to a weaker user's needs has as a further consequence the outcome of indiscriminately extending the possibility of access to culture, since improving the relationship with the space can also help improve our relationship with ourselves and with others.
