Caregivers of Young Children United States United States Government, 2014-11-20 Whether caregivers work with children from low middle or upper income homes at some time they are likely to encounter child maltreatment Relatives parents grandparents etc and nonrelatives child care providers teachers etc who abuse and neglect children live in cities suburbs and rural areas come from all ethnic backgrounds can be male or female and may be any age Child abuse and neglect may be a single incident such as a child care provider shaking an infant to make him/her stop crying it may be a pattern of behavior such as incest between parent and child that takes place over several months or years or it may be parental failure to provide adequate supervision of a toddler on an ongoing basis Child maltreatment is often difficult to recognize particularly in young children who are not seen regularly by anyone other than their parents and child care providers The caregivers frequent contacts with children put them in an excellent position to recognize and report suspected child maltreatment In addition by providing support to children families and colleagues under stress and building on family strengths caregivers may help them learn ways to cope with their problems thus preventing maltreatment from occurring When maltreated children are enrolled in a high quality child care program the caregivers sensitivity to their feelings and needs will contribute to their recovery from abuse or neglect
