

Car Park Ventilation System Design - Fan Quantities

Description

For the purpose of estimating costs, the steps on the following pages may be bypassed. Allow 5N of thrust per 100m² of car park floor area to approximate the number of fans required.

Estimating fan quantities

The following steps are sufficient to create an initial impulse ventilation system design. A Computational Fluid Dynamics (CFD) analysis is often required to prove and further refine the design. Fans may need to be re-orientated, or in some cases, added or removed. An impulse ventilation system can be tailored to suit virtually any car park. Before considering fan locations, the system layout will need to be identified. Refer to the previous section for information relating to system layouts and their suitability for particular car parks.

Step 1 - Assessing Car Park Geometry

First identify the supply and exhaust points in the car park. A system that complements the natural air path and is able to circulate or move air effectively within the car park should be chosen. Certain layout features may assist the effectiveness of a particular layout as shown below:
