Renewable Energy Policy Convergence in the EU David Jacobs, 2016-03-23 This book examines the coordination of renewable energy policies in the European Union using an innovative theoretical approach to explain national policy making David Jacobs asks why are national support instruments for electricity from renewable energy sources converging even though the harmonisation of these frameworks at the European level has failed Which causal mechanisms lead to cross national policy similarities And what are the implications for policy coordination in the EU The author traces the evolution of feed in tariffs the most successful and most widely used support mechanism for renewable electricity in Germany Spain and France He reveals increasing cross national policy similarities in feed in tariff design despite the failure of harmonizing instruments at the European level He explains these increasing policy similarities by applying policy convergence theory Policy convergence can occur voluntarily based on transnational communication regulatory competition and technological innovations and these findings have important implications for European policy steering The key to this book is the interrelation of an innovative theoretical concept coordination of policies in the international arena via voluntary cooperation with a very topical empirical research focus the promotion of renewable energies in the EU It will be essential reading for scholars and students of environmental policy comparative politics and European studies

Green power already out of breath? Why do German consumers not switch to green electricity? Sarah Herz, 2012-11-15 Bachelor Thesis from the year 2011 in the subject Economy Environment economics grade 1.7 University of Southern Denmark language English abstract The purpose of this paper is to provide a profound analysis of the motives for the non switching behavior to green power vendors in Germany While academic research provides many potential reasons only a few have concentrated on internal and external influences on switching behavior as well as actual compliance with theoretical models In this context a survey has been undertaken in the Federal State of Mecklenburg West Pomerania to analyze the personal relevance of different motives for consumers Furthermore the survey also aimed at analyzing the compliance of theoretical criteria provided by the Norm Activation Model and the Theory of Planned Behavior in order to see whether respondents intent to switch after all Therefore the survey was distributed via the snowball system and has been completed by 115 respondents providing data on 77 respondents who still consume conventional power Though academic research has identified many potential motives for the switching inertia such as the lack of information trust and transparency in the electricity market the survey at hand only confirmed one significant reason for non switching This reason relates to the consumers perception that green power is quantitatively not sufficient to supply the whole German electricity market
