

Management must decide whether economy and low operational cost are compatible with increased information, based on additional cost computations and procedures. Some companies use both job order and process costing procedures for various purposes in different departments. The basis for using either method should be reliable production and performance data which, when combined with output, budget, or standard cost data, will provide the foundation for effective cost control and analysis.

DISCUSSION QUESTIONS

1. What are the possible effects on units and costs in process when materials are added in subsequent departments?
2. Distinguish between the fifo and average methods of process costing.
3. Why are units completed and on hand in a processing department included in the department's work in process?
4. How are equivalent production figures computed when fifo costing is used?
5. The Wiring Department is the second stage of Flem Company's production cycle. On May 1, the beginning work in process contained 25,000 units which were 60% complete as to conversion costs. During May, 100,000 units were transferred in from the first stage of Flem's production cycle. On May 31, the ending work in process contained 20,000 units which were 60% complete as to conversion costs. Material costs are added at the end of the process. Using the average method, compute the equivalent units of production. (AICPA adapted)

6. Ace Company computed the flow of physical units for Department A for April, as follows:

Units completed:

From work in process on April 1	10,000
From April production	30,000
	40,000

Materials are added at the beginning of the process. Units of work in process at April 30 were 8,000. The work in process at April 1 was 80% complete as to conversion costs and the work in process at April 30 was 60% complete as to conversion costs. What are the equivalent units of production for April, using the fifo method? (AICPA adapted)

7. What are some of the disadvantages of the fifo costing method?
8. Enumerate several of the basic difficulties frequently encountered in process costing.
9. Express an opinion as to the usefulness of data, derived from process costing, for the control of costs.

EXERCISES

1. Cost of production report; materials added. Oloroso, Inc. produces a cologne, Mr. Sudor, which requires processing in three departments. In the third department, materials are added, doubling the number of units. The following data pertain to the operations of Department 3 for March:
