The impact of processes of change in the environment on the development of the individual is a topic that has been discussed in the literature for many years. The present study aims to investigate the impact of the environment on the development of the individual, focusing on the role of the family and the school. The study is based on a theoretical framework that considers the individual as a product of the interaction between genetic and environmental factors. The research is conducted through a series of interviews with parents and teachers, as well as through the analysis of school records. The results of the study indicate that the environment plays a significant role in the development of the individual, particularly in the areas of socialization and learning. The family and the school are identified as the primary agents of environmental influence. The study also highlights the importance of a supportive and stimulating environment for the healthy development of the individual. The findings of the study have implications for educational practice and for the development of policies aimed at improving the quality of the environment for children and young people.
