Carolina BioKits™ Immunodetective Investigation

Pre-laboratory Questions

1. What are antibodies and what function do they serve in the body?

Answer:

A defensive protein termed an antibody, also known as immunoglobulin, is created by the immune system in reaction to the presence of an antigen, a foreign substance. To eliminate antigens from the body, antibodies recognize and cling to them. The body classifies a wide variety of things as antigens, including pathogenic organisms and deadly compounds like insect venom.

2. What is an antigen?

Answer:

A poison or other foreign material that triggers the body's immune system, particularly the formation of antibodies.

3. What characteristic of antibodies and antigens allows them to form the antibody—antigen networks that constitute the precipitin lines seen in the Ouchterlony agar plates?

Answer:

In agar matrix, immune precipitates can occur. A visible line of precipitation will form when antigen and antibody diffuse towards one another in agar, or when antibody is absorbed into the agar and antigen diffuses into the matrix holding the antibody. Similar to a precipitation reaction in a fluid, observable precipitation develops in the zone of equivalence but not in areas of excess antibody or antigen.

During this process, antigen and antibody are permitted to migrate through a gel towards one another, and a line of precipitation forms where the two reactants come into contact.
