Abstract: Staphylococcus aureus is a common pathogen that is a leading cause of nosocomial infections. It is a Gram-positive, spherical bacterium that is resistant to many antibiotics. It is a facultative anaerobe and can grow in the presence of oxygen or without it. It is a highly adaptable organism that can survive in a wide range of environments, including on the skin and in the nasal cavity. It is a major cause of skin infections, such as abscesses and boils, and is also a common cause of food poisoning. It is a highly contagious organism that can be spread from person to person or from animal to person. It is a major cause of hospital-acquired infections and is a leading cause of death in many developing countries. Case-control studies suggest that both long-term and short-term use of oral contraceptives may be associated with an increased risk of developing breast cancer. However, the risk appears to be higher for women who have used oral contraceptives for 10 years or more, and for those who have used them for 5 years or more. The risk also appears to be higher for women who have used oral contraceptives for 5 years or more, and for those who have used them for 5 years or more.
