

moved to better a society through various works of charity, usually initiate foundations that focus on various aspects of the society for instance, education or environment (Daniel).

The primary benefit of community service is that it spawns off a development in the community that would seem overwhelming to an individual. For example, if a person notices there is a piece of land that is neglected and he/she would look better with trees and flowers, they can decide to come together with their friends and start a beautification activity. Other members of the community may be inspired by such an activity and volunteer to join; this may ignite a chain reaction where many people may end up participating and turning a single activity into a project covering the entire community. Such a project brings people together and develops a spirit of togetherness and caring for one another, and the surroundings (Arrington).

My own personal experience partaking in community service took place in a Buddhist temple where I volunteered for three months. The activities I carried out included serving lunch, cleaning the temple and statues, and directing people to the different prayer sessions. It was a fulfilling experience as it taught me the importance of spirituality as I interacted with the priests and gave me an opportunity to help people from different occupations. The way the priests lead such simplistic lives inspired me and interacting with ordinary people emulating their lives made it seem achievable. I developed a sense of discipline from following the schedule of the activities at the temple as they were adhered to strictly. In addition, the community service gave me exposure to people of different backgrounds, cultures and ages.

It is detrimental, however, to impress community service upon high school students because it makes them repel against it and lose enthusiasm. That kind of repulsion may make them develop a negative attitude towards the whole exercise, which in turn could cause them not
