

Chapter 1: Understanding American Politics

Government: The system for implementing decisions made through the political process. The purpose is to provide order and general welfare.

Factions: Groups of like- minded people who try to influence the government. The American government is set up to avoid domination by any of these groups.

Separation of Powers: The division of government power across the judicial, executive, and legislative branches.

Checks and Balances: Each branch of government has some power over the others

Federalism: Division of power across the local, state, and national levels of government.

Public Good: Services or actions that are available to everyone usually provided by the government. You don't have to pay money, but benefit from having it.

Collective Action Problems: Situations in which it is beneficial for groups to work together for an outcome, but fail to do so because of conflicts and wanting to reap the benefits.

Free rider problem: The incentive to let other people do the work for you and benefit from that.

Aristotle's types of governments:

- Monarchy: Rule by one
- Aristocracy: Rule by the few
- Polity: Rule by the many

Politics: The process that determines what government does.

Key ideas of politics:

- Politics is conflictual: Politics will be disagreed upon and conflict will occur. Conflict is unavoidable. It is politics' job to resolve the conflict. People can't just ignore conflict and must come up with compromises. Not everyone can always be happy.
- Political process matters: Government actions result from conscious choices made by elected officials and bureaucrats. Politics are important to make changes happen in government.
- Politics is everywhere: What government should do or who should be in charge are integral to society. Politics helps determine what people can and cannot do, quality of life, how they think about events, people, situations. Political thought is driven by beliefs and actions in other parts of life.
