

Chapter 11 Intangible Assets

Introduction

- Intangible Assets are identifiable non-monetary assets without physical substance.

Essential elements of an intangible asset

1. Identifiability - an intangible asset is identifiable when it:
 - a. is separable, i.e., capable of being separated and divided from the entity and sold, transferred, licensed, rented, or exchanged, either individually or together with a related contract, identifiable asset or liability, regardless of whether the entity intends to do so; or
 - b. arises from binding arrangements including contractual or other legal rights, regardless of whether those rights are transferable or separable from the entity or from other rights and obligations.
2. Control - the entity has the ability to benefit from the intangible asset or prevent others from benefitting from it.

Control of an intangible asset normally arises from legal rights that are enforceable in a court of law. However, legal enforceability of a right is not a necessary condition for control because an entity may be able to control the future economic benefits or service potential in some other way.

3. Future economic benefits or service potential - the future economic benefits or service potential flowing from an intangible asset may include revenue from the sale of products or services, cost savings, or other benefits resulting from the use of the asset by the entity. For example, the use of intellectual property in a production or service process may reduce future production or service costs or improve service delivery rather than increase future revenues (e.g., an on-line system that allows citizens to apply or renew licenses more quickly on-line, resulting in a reduction in office staff required to perform this function while increasing the speed of processing).

Common examples of intangible assets are computer software, patents, copyrights, franchise, motion picture films, trademarks or brand names, licenses, acquired import quotas, lists of users of a service, and relationships with users of a service.

Recognition

An intangible asset is recognized if it meets the definition of an intangible asset and the recognition criteria for assets.

Initial Measurement

An intangible asset is *initially measured at cost.

The measurement of cost depends on the mode of acquisition, which is similar to those of PPE and investment property. A summary is provided below:

Mode of Acquisition

- a. Purchase
