These findings regarding the relationship between the frequency of the visits and the amount of alcohol consumed are consistent with the findings of other, observational studies. However, these findings are not consistent with the findings of other, experimental studies. For example, a study by the National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism (NIAAA) found that increasing the frequency of visits to a treatment center led to a decrease in alcohol consumption. This finding is consistent with the findings of the present study. However, the present study did not find a significant relationship between the frequency of visits and the amount of alcohol consumed. This finding is inconsistent with the findings of the NIAAA study. The reason for this inconsistency is not clear. It may be that the present study was not powered to detect a significant relationship between the frequency of visits and the amount of alcohol consumed. Alternatively, it may be that the present study was not representative of the population of interest. Further research is needed to clarify the relationship between the frequency of visits and the amount of alcohol consumed.

■ Effect of the intervention on the use of evidence-based practice: The results of the intervention were positive. The use of evidence-based practice was significantly higher in the intervention group than in the control group.

Dr. Wilson suggests a broader, less-structured approach to the topic. Besides the current efforts at participating in some way, students will also be encouraged to research.

The present research on the effects of the intervention on the children's social skills was limited to the children's ability to identify and express their own emotions. The children's ability to identify and express the emotions of others was not assessed. In future research, the children's ability to identify and express the emotions of others should be assessed. The children's ability to identify and express the emotions of others is an important social skill that is necessary for successful social interactions.
