

Chapter-3

SYSTEM DESIGN

3.1 INTRODUCTION

System design is the process of defining the architecture, components, modules, interfaces, and data for a system to satisfy specified requirements. It involves translating user requirements into a detailed blueprint that guides the implementation phase. In detail design we specify how the modules in the system interact with each other. Detailed specification is given by explaining in natural language what the modules are supposed to do. Detail design specification describes the features of the system. Detail design is the refinement of the system design that essentially expands system design to contain more detail description of the processing logic of the components and data structure such that design can be easily implemented.

3.2 CONTEXT FLOW DIAGRAM

Context flow diagram is a top-level data flow diagram. It only contains one process node that generalises the function of the entire system in relation to external entities. In a context diagram the entire system is treated as a single process and all its inputs, outputs, sinks and sources are identified and shown.

3.3 DATA FLOW DIAGRAM

Data Flow Diagram is a graphical representation of a system or a portion of the system. It consists of data flows, process, sources and sink and stores all the description through the use of easily understandable symbols. DFD is one of the most important modelling tools. It is used to model the system, components that interact with the system, uses the data and information flows in the system. DFD shows the information moves through the and how it is modified by a series of transformations. It is a graphical technique that depicts information moves from input or output. DFD is also known as bubble chart or Data Flow Graphs. DFD
