SOLUTIONS

CHEMISTRY BY PRADEEP

1.1 GENERAL INTRODUCTION

In our everyday life, we rarely come across pure substances. Most of things are homogeneous mixtures of two or more pure substances. By homogeneous mixtures, we mean those mixtures in which composition and nature throughout the mixture, both homogeneous mixtures are called solutions. Further, a solution may contain varying amounts of the components. Hence, a solution may be defined as follows:

A solution is a homogeneous mixture of two or more chemically non-reacting substances where composition and its nature varies within limits.

In a homogeneous mixture, all the particles are of similar size, i.e., up to 10^{-9} m in diameter and the different constituents of the mixture cannot be separated by any of the physical methods like filtering, settling or centrifuging. Every solution is made up of a solute and one or more solvents. A solution containing only one solvent dissolved in it is called a binary solution.

A solute is the component of the solution which is present in lesser amount as compared to the other component present in it.

Solvents in binary or called solvent substances, and the substance in which solvent is dissolved is called solute substances. The solvents in the mixtures are usually known, other called solventless mix.

Dependence of solution: The rate of formation of solution is depending on the degree upon the composition. For example:

- There is a homogeneous mixture of copper and zinc. Copper is less soluble in zinc and zinc is more soluble in copper. They have different properties and hence are called solid solution.
- 1 part per million (ppm) of gold in silver is more soluble in silver than 1 part per million of gold in copper. Hence, silver is more soluble in silver than copper.
- 100 g of water can dissolve 100 g of sugar in 100 g of water at room temperature. 100 g of water can dissolve 100 g of sugar in 100 g of water at room temperature. 100 g of water can dissolve 100 g of sugar in 100 g of water at room temperature.

1.2 TYPES OF SOLUTIONS

A solution can be solid, liquid or gas depending upon the physical state of the solute. The various types of solution are listed in Table 1.1.
