

Argumentative Research Paper Cheat Sheet (with examples)

REVIEW

(Things I've already told you that many people have not applied in their first paragraph)

1. Do not use words like "I think/believe/assume/guess/etc..." We are not interested in belief or opinion here, only fact and argument. State your claims and your evidence clearly and confidently.
2. BE SPECIFIC
 - a. Avoid vague modifiers; i.e. very, certainly, definitely, totally, a lot, many, several, often, sometimes, usually, etc. Instead, find an actual way to measure what you want to claim.
 - b. Avoid vague or general verbs: tend to, increase, help, improve, harm, hurt, etc. Again, find evidence that measures these claims. How much does a thing increase? How much worse is the thing?
3. Don't make unnecessary/impossible claims: always, every time, everyone, everywhere, forever. You do not need to prove that "Everyone" believes or thinks a certain thing, so don't say that. It hurts your credibility.
4. Work on writing simple, straightforward sentences. Write sentences with one subject and one verb. This will help you be clear and concise, and avoid rambling, repeating yourself, or constructing confusing sentences.
5. Every paragraph should be focused on one argument, one main idea. This argument/claim should be made explicitly in a topic sentence (which is kind of like a mini-thesis statement for your paragraph). Here's a resource on writing those: Topic Sentences
6. Everything must be MLA. You should all know this by now. If you need help, visit Purdue OWL. There are explicit rules, and I will not be teaching them. They are always available for reference, and to do these things incorrectly can only be attributed to laziness or inattention. Do it right.
