Abstract: Patients with moderate to severe depression and anxiety disorders are at high risk of suicidal ideation and suicidal behavior. This study examined the effectiveness of a brief, manualized, and structured intervention for suicidal ideation and suicidal behavior in a sample of 100 patients with moderate to severe depression and anxiety disorders. The intervention was delivered by a mental health professional and consisted of a 1-hour session. The intervention was effective in reducing suicidal ideation and suicidal behavior in the sample. The findings suggest that a brief, manualized, and structured intervention can be effective in reducing suicidal ideation and suicidal behavior in a sample of patients with moderate to severe depression and anxiety disorders.
