Abstract: Patients with moderate to severe depression and anxiety disorders are at high risk of developing suicidal thoughts and suicidal behavior. This review examines the effectiveness of psychological treatments for suicidal thoughts and suicidal behavior. The following studies were included in the review: 1) randomized controlled trials of psychological treatments for suicidal thoughts and suicidal behavior; 2) non-randomized controlled trials of psychological treatments for suicidal thoughts and suicidal behavior; 3) case series of psychological treatments for suicidal thoughts and suicidal behavior. The review found that psychological treatments are effective in reducing suicidal thoughts and suicidal behavior in patients with moderate to severe depression and anxiety disorders. The most effective treatments were cognitive behavioral therapy (CBT) and dialectical behavior therapy (DBT). CBT and DBT were also found to be effective in reducing suicidal thoughts and suicidal behavior in patients with borderline personality disorder (BPD). The review also found that psychological treatments are effective in reducing suicidal thoughts and suicidal behavior in patients with post-traumatic stress disorder (PTSD) and obsessive-compulsive disorder (OCD). The review concludes that psychological treatments are effective in reducing suicidal thoughts and suicidal behavior in patients with moderate to severe depression and anxiety disorders. The most effective treatments are CBT and DBT. CBT and DBT are also effective in reducing suicidal thoughts and suicidal behavior in patients with BPD, PTSD, and OCD.
