Moments of Reflection and Negotiation in Contemporary Feminist Identity* Elizabeth Ryan Brownlow,2020 In 2014 Roxane Gay published Bad Feminist a collection of personal essays written from her position as a Haitian American feminist academic This work quickly skyrocketed in popularity across both academic and nonacademic audiences Representative of the increasingly public facing autoethnographic scholarship of feminist academic women Gay's work is a product of its time For this dissertation I examine Bad Feminist along with two other also wildly popular autoethnographic works produced in the same decade Tressie McMillan Cotton's Thick And Other Essays and Maggie Nelson's The Argonauts I examine these texts as public facing accessible works that communicate their academic feminist authors feelings of feminist inadequacy in order to address larger issues of feminist practice and theory Utilizing Sara Ahmed's theory of becoming feminist I analyze the bad feminist moments expressed in these texts as moments of feminist crisis to identify what causes them and what functions they might serve Using qualitative methodological triangulation better known as mixed methods research I employ topic modeling and content analysis across all three texts to identify patterns that reveal not only why and how academic feminists might feel like they are bad feminists but how and why they choose to share the moments in which they feel like bad feminists with others Fighting to maintain their feminist identities in a world rife with gendered and raced violence neoliberal ideals of self sufficiency and individual perfection rapidly evolving technologies and intersecting historical structures of oppression these authors utilize moments of feminist imperfection to create space and time to disarticulate and rearticulate their relationships to feminism their relationships to other people and their relationships to academia In this project I conclude that bad feminist moments might be reactions to the pressures of both historical and contemporary structures of oppression but the choice to reflect on them and share with others is based in feminist principles of reflexivity and collective inspiration to resist perpetuating ongoing structures of oppression inside and outside of the academy

I Am a Bad Feminist. I Would Rather be a Bad Feminist Than No Feminist at All. Jason Morales, 2022-09-04 Today s society is riddled with music television and movies that damage the representations of women We have singers like Robin Thicke who know we want it and rappers like Jay Z who use the word bitch like it s punctuation In movies we often follow the stories of men When women are involved they are typically sidekicks or romantic interests Rarely are women the center of attention So what do we do

How do we bring attention to these issues Many people might think the answer is feminism But to Roxane Gay feminism is largely flawed This is because feminism is a movement powered by people and people are inherently flawed Another problem is that feminists are too often associated with popular figures and people with the biggest platform and loudest voice As a result we forget the difference between feminism and Professional Feminists For these reasons Gay embraces the label of bad feminist Gay recognizes that she is both flawed and human She is not trying to be perfect she may even have certain interests and opinions that go against mainstream feminism She recognizes she does not have all the answers but at the end of the day she is still a feminist When Gay was younger being a feminist meant being an angry sex hating man hating victim lady person and this caricature has been warped by those who fear feminism most Gay herself feared it It wasn't until she realized that feminism was about advocating for gender equality in all areas of life that she began to embrace it Feminism has given her peace and has guided her writings readings and the way she lives Through her collection of essays Gay aims to lead the movement of being a bad feminist She examines race in contemporary films as well as the limits of diversity Like feminism her ideas may be flawed but they are genuine As Gay states I am just one woman trying to make sense of this world we live in I'm raising my voice to show all the ways we have room to want more to do better Women's Rights Ann M.
