21 The rear part of the top is stapled in place onto the staple bar. The top also needs to be trimmed so the studs in the car can protrude through the bar and the nuts can be reinstalled. Before the top is attached to the bar, it also needs to be precisely measured to fit the car.

22 The staple bar, or well frame, as it's also known, is made up of three pieces—two corners and the main bar shown in step 10. Here, the top canvas is stapled to the driver-side corner of the well frame.

23 This is one of the trickier parts of the installation. The rear quarter pads (shown in step 15), the window, and the top canvas are all installed at the same time at the back of the car. They are also all

24 Back at the front of the top frame, the top is glued into place after it's trimmed and final-fitted. Once glued, it's finally secured into place by reinstalling the weatherstrip that was removed to access and remove the old top canvas.

25 The retaining bars (shown being removed in step four) are reinstalled after the top is glued into place underneath where they mount to the frame. The top is fully attached where it joins the car.

27 With the top frame halfway raised to relieve the tension on the canvas, the metal support ribs are reinstalled into the sewn-in channels on the underside of the top canvas. These ribs are screwed into place with the channel material sandwiched in between, thus holding the top in place. The ribs were removed from the original top and are reused with the new top.

28 The final step is to install the new wire-on strip that comes with the new canvas. It's first stapled into place with long staples, then trimmed to size. Next, it's folded in half and tapped down with a hammer before the ends are screwed into place, as shown.
