

2. Literature Review on Effective Assessment

The Curriculum Research and Development Division of Ghana (CRDDG, 2007; 2010) assert that Social Studies prepares the individual to fit into society by equipping him/her with knowledge about the culture and ways of life of their society, its problems, its values and its hopes for the future. This implies that teachers' pedagogical content knowledge of Social Studies should be geared towards imbuing in student righted ideals.

It is obvious that instruction would be viewed as incomplete if it is not assessed. Assessment plays an integral role in the teaching and learning of Social Studies. Ajiboye (2008) views assessment as the process of gathering information about a student in order to make decisions about his or her education. Sharing a similar view, Burman (1987) asserts that, assessment in education occurs whenever one person interprets information and/or makes comment about the knowledge, comprehension, attitude and/or mind-set of another. These imply that effective assessment in Social Studies education should not only aimed at finding out how much a learner or student has acquired in terms of learning skills but also takes into consideration the personal-social development of the student.

Assessment is used for different purposes within different levels of the educational system. For instance, at the Senior High school level, external assessment in most cases serves as accountability measures and as a result they induce teachers to devote significant amounts of instructional time to preparing students to excel in these examinations. Traditionally, the primary aim of assessment is to foster learning of worthwhile academic content for all students. Education reformers agree that assessment and instruction are two sides of a coin and that an inevitably broad connects assessment, curriculum and teaching in the service of learning (Kathy, 2000). This implies effective assessment is not just about the traditional tests. Odeyinka (2004) citing Nwari (1993) submitted that for years, tests have been designed to reflect the positivistic-quantitative paradigm and have been developed to ensure that young people are learning the "basics".

A significant number of research has focused on ascertaining what effective assessment practice involves. It is suggested that there are four key principles which underpin effective assessment. They are that assessment is: (i) constructively aligned with the curriculum, teaching and learning, (ii) methodologically varied and valid, (iii) learning-oriented, and (iv) supported by clearly articulated criteria for success (Black & William, 1998; Biggs, 2003; Earl, 2003; James, 2006; Hattie, 2007; Aiken & Smeeta, 2008; Brown, Irving & Kuegan, 2008; Cleveland & Wright, 2009; Miller & Cleveland, 2009). These philosophical principles are often exhibited in teachers' assessment practices through the six characteristics of effective assessment shown in Table 1 below.
