Figure 1 presents the results of the regression analysis. The dependent variable is the number of days of absence from work. The independent variable is the number of days of absence from work in the previous year. The results show that the number of days of absence from work in the previous year is a significant determinant of the number of days of absence from work in the current year. The coefficient is positive and significant at the 1% level. This indicates that the number of days of absence from work in the previous year is a significant determinant of the number of days of absence from work in the current year.
