Crankcase Emission Control System

Crankcase Control Valve

The crankcase emission control system is a closed system. Therefore, no crankcase emissions are discharged into the atmosphere.

When intake manifold vacuum is low, such as during acceleration, the crankcase emission control valve will fully open allowing crankcase emissions to enter the intake manifold.

When intake manifold vacuum is high, such as during deceleration, the diaphragm in the control valve is pulled down, reducing the amount of crankcase emissions entering the intake manifold.

An orifice in the control valve allows crankcase emissions to enter the intake manifold at idle and deceleration. This helps control crankcase pressure.

When checking or adjusting CO content, the hose from the intake air emission control valve to the intake manifold disconnects and is plugged. The crankcase cap's vent to atmosphere during adjustment.
