

Reading Comprehension Worksheet: Politics of Reconstruction

Directions: Read the following passage carefully and answer the questions that follow.

The Reconstruction era in the United States refers to the period from 1865 to 1877, immediately following the Civil War. The primary goal of Reconstruction was to rebuild the South after the devastation of the war and to bring the Confederate states back into the Union. Reconstruction also aimed to address the issue of slavery and to ensure that newly freed slaves were granted the rights and protections of full citizenship. Two groups of people rose to support the reconstruction efforts.

Carpetbaggers were Northern-born people who moved to the South after the Civil War with the intention of profiting from the region's rebuilding efforts. They were often seen as opportunistic outsiders who were exploiting the chaos and devastation of the war for their own personal gain. Some Carpetbaggers were involved in politics and worked to promote civil rights and protect the rights of African Americans. Others were businesspeople who invested in the South's economy, including in industries such as railroads and agriculture. Scalawags, on the other hand, were Southern-born white people who supported the Republican Party during Reconstruction. They were often seen as traitors to their region and their race and were subject to significant backlash from other Southerners who opposed Reconstruction efforts. Scalawags were key players in state and local governments in the South, and many worked to promote civil rights and protect the rights of African Americans.

During Reconstruction, the federal government and Republicans implemented several measures to help rebuild the South and protect the rights of African Americans. These measures included the establishment of the Freedmen's Bureau, which provided education, housing, and employment assistance to former slaves, and the passage of the 13th, 14th, and 15th Amendments to the Constitution.

The 13th Amendment, ratified in 1865, abolished slavery and involuntary servitude, except as punishment for a crime. African Americans were no longer considered property and could live as free individuals. This was a major step towards granting African Americans their basic human rights and was a key part of the effort to promote civil rights during the Reconstruction era. However, despite the passage of the 13th Amendment, African Americans continued to face significant discrimination and challenges in the years that followed. The 13th Amendment did not address the issue of sharecropping, which trapped former slaves in a system of debt peonage and replaced the system of slavery. Under the sharecropping system, a landowner would provide a tenant farmer with a plot of land, often with a small cabin, and the farmer would work the land and grow crops. They were often forced to take out loans from the landowner to purchase supplies, such as seed and tools, and were then required to pay back these loans with interest, which often left them in debt and unable to earn a profit.

The 14th Amendment, ratified in 1868, granted citizenship to all persons born or naturalized in the United States, including former slaves. This amendment ensured that African Americans had the same legal rights and privileges as other citizens, and prohibited states from denying them equal protection under the law. This amendment was a response to the Supreme Court's decision in Dred Scott v. Sandford (1857), which had denied citizenship to African Americans. This meant that if states or individuals violated the rights of African Americans, the federal government could intervene and take action to protect those rights. The 14th Amendment did not explicitly address the issue of voting rights, leaving the door open for states to create barriers to voting through poll taxes, literacy tests, and other discriminatory measures.

The 15th Amendment, ratified in 1870, extended the right to vote to African American men, prohibiting states from depriving them based on race. While these amendments were crucial in
