The Imperatives of a Learning Organisation: The Case of Cape Peninsula University of Technology Stephan Bach, 2013-10-23 Bachelor Thesis from the year 2012 in the subject Business economics Business Management Corporate Governance grade 1.0 language English abstract

Organisational learning was first mentioned in the management literature by Drucker 1958:47. He stated management is first and foremost about the continuing development of the organisation and its employees. The demands and needs of the environment are constantly evolving and management is about adjusting the company according to the needs and demands of the environment. Since then the literature available extensively covers the term organisational learning. Several authors in the fields of management, economics, sociology, psychology and education wrote about the subject. As a result the field of organisational learning became rather fragmented. Studies have been carried out in separate disciplines independent of each other. Boreham and Morgan 2004:307-325. Though the field has become fragmented because of the diversities in approaches to this study it is possible to identify a core definition of what organisational learning is. Lundvall 2001:273-291. According to Robinson 2010:1-13 early studies focused mainly on the decision taking processes as a form of organisational learning. For example Argyris 1977:115-125 stated that organisational learning is a process of detecting and correcting error. Another definition from Hedberg 1981:1-27 argues that organisational learning is the process through which managers seek to improve employees' desires and abilities to understand and manage the organisation and its task environment so that employees can make decisions and function effectively. Later the influences of organisational learning on the whole organisation became evident. The work of Armstrong and Foley 2003:74-82 indicates that organisational learning is a process that takes place in organisations which enables learning of its members in such a way that positively valued outcomes are created. The expected outcomes are innovation, efficiency and better alignment with the environment leading to competitive advantage of the organisation. The effects of organisational learning are manifested in the organisation's systems, structures and culture. More recent literature defines organisational learning as a dynamic process of creation, acquisition and integration of knowledge with the aim to develop resources and capabilities that contribute to improved organisational performance. Lopez-Pon and Ord's 2005:227-245.

Technologies and Transactions David J. Lewis, 1991 Keeping Pace with the Advancing Curriculum National Education Association of the United States. Research Division, 1925 Google Semantic Search in Ireland. Personalisation, Trust, Influence, Reliance, Reputation, and Ethics Pierce Ivory, 2016-05-02 Master's Thesis from the year 2015 in the subject Communications Public Relations Advertising Marketing Social Media grade First Class Honours course Masters Degree in Digital Marketing Semantic Search Personalisation language English abstract This research is an investigation into the Irish public's perception of Google search The study examines the methods used by Google to present users with the most relevant and satisfactory search results 95% of the online public in Ireland use Google as a search tool This study aims to uncover true user sentiment in Ireland The objectives of this research are to reveal how the Irish public view Google in regards to semantic search personalisation trust influence reliance reputation and ethics The existing literature revealed that Google's search engine has evolved from one that used Boolean Search logic to match keywords to a semantic engine that understands user intent and context The literature also reveals how the younger Millennial generation associate the Internet with one brand Google The literature examines search personalisation and how intuitive it has become as it serves us with content that matches our online behaviour We discover that over personalisation is narrowing our search bubble which in turn can blind us from other information outside our search reach During the course of this study a mixed method research was used to measure and discuss public opinion This study has identified where literature has fallen short Where gaps have appeared in the literature qualitative meaning has been extracted from 3 groups of people from differing levels of technical ability and experience It was discovered that age demographic affects how we view Google as a search engine Quantitative findings revealed that 75% of users were aware of personalisation but 70% of these users were not always happy with the results Although a general consensus was formed that personalisation was helpful in many respects it was also argued in some camps that it breached ethical boundaries Overall there was a national split whether users considered personalisation ethical or not This study leaves open the debate of how we perceive Google as a nation but it also gets closer to the truth of how we feel about the search engine on a personal level The research also confirms that there is plenty of opportunity to carry out further studies into this area
