- Main Dial. This dial is used to change shooting settings. When settings are available in pairs (such as shutter speed/aperture), this dial will be used to make one type of setting, such as shutter speed. The other setting, say, the aperture, is made using an alternate control, such as spinning the Main Dial while holding down an additional button like the exposure compensation button (which resides conveniently under the thumb on the back of the camera).
- Red-eye reduction/Self-timer lamp. This LED provides a flip-of light directly before a flash exposure to cause the subjects' pupils to close down, reducing the effect of red-eye reflections off their retinas. When using the self-timer, this lamp also flashes to mark the countdown until the photo is taken.
- Microphone. This is a monaural (non-stereo) microphone for recording the audio track of your HDV movies.
- Lens bayonet mount. This metal accepts the lens bayonet on the lens and allows mounting the lens firmly on the camera body.
- Mirror. When using the optical viewfinder, the mirror reflects most of the light upward to the focusing screen and exposure meter system, and directs a small amount of light downward to the autofocus sensors. The mirror flips up out of the way to expose the shutter curtains when taking a picture, and the sensor when using Live View mode or capturing video.
- EF/EF-S lens mounting index. Line up the red index mark to align EF lenses for mounting, and use the white square to align EF-S optics.
- Electronic contacts. These contacts mate with matching contacts on the rear of the lens to allow the camera and lens to exchange information about focus, aperture setting, and other functions.

- Lens release button. Press and hold down this button to allow rotating the lens to remove it from the camera.
- Lens release locking pin. This pin retracts when the lens release button is held down, allowing the lens to rotate.

You'll find more controls on the other side of the T6, shown in Figures 3.3 and 3.4.

- Lens autofocus/Manual switch. Canon autofocus lenses have a switch to allow changing between automatic focus and manual focus.
- Lens image stabilization switch. With IS lenses, this switch is used to turn image stabilization on and off.
- Lens release button. Another view of the button used to unlock the lens so you can rotate the lens to remove it from the camera.
- Pop-up flash. The internal flash unit pops up automatically when needed when using Basic Zone, Full Auto, Portrait, Close-up, and Night Portrait modes (and is disabled when using Auto-Off Flash, Landscape, and Sports modes). The flash can be popped up manually when using Creative Auto, and any of the Creative Zone modes (P, Tv, Av, or M). (See Figure 3.4.)
- Flash button. This button, located on top of the camera, but mentioned here, releases the built-in flash in Creative Zone and Creative Auto modes so it can flip up and start the charging process (see Figure 3.4, upper right). If you decide you do not want to use the flash, you can turn it off by pressing the flash head back down. This button can be re-programmed to produce the ISO screen using Custom Function FV-36, as described in Chapter 9. If you redefine this button, you can still raise the built-in flash using the Quick Control screen, described later in this chapter.
