Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine whether there were differences in the prevalence of self-reported depression between men and women who had been exposed to violence during childhood and adulthood. Data from the National Longitudinal Study of Adolescent Health (N = 9,800) were used to examine the relationship between exposure to violence and self-reported depression among adolescents. Results showed that exposure to violence during childhood and adulthood was associated with higher rates of self-reported depression. Furthermore, the association between exposure to violence and self-reported depression was stronger for women than for men.

biochemical synthesis of the components of cholesterol (e.g., synthesis of isoprenoid precursors, mevalonate, β -hydroxyisovalerate, squalene, sterols) and the subsequent conversion of these precursors to cholesterol. In the early 1970s, cholesterol synthesis was shown to be regulated by a number of factors, including dietary intake, hormonal control, and feedback inhibition. The discovery of the enzyme HMG-CoA reductase, which catalyzes the conversion of HMG-CoA to mevalonate, was a major breakthrough in understanding cholesterol synthesis. This enzyme is the rate-limiting step in the synthesis of cholesterol and is the target of the statin drugs, which inhibit its activity. The regulation of cholesterol synthesis is a complex process involving multiple factors, including diet, hormones, and feedback inhibition. The discovery of the enzyme HMG-CoA reductase and its role in cholesterol synthesis was a major breakthrough in understanding the regulation of cholesterol synthesis.
