Accessing I/O devices:

A simple arrangement to connect I/O devices to System bus is shown below

- * In the above figure, CPU interacts with memory directly, but it interacts with I/O devices through an intermediate hardware component that is I/O interface.

Why I/O device is not connected to Bus directly :-

The reasons are as follows :-

- ① Data transfer rate of peripherals is usually slower or lesser than the transfer rate of CPU, so consequently some Synchronisation mechanism may be needed.
- ② Wide variety of peripherals may connect to BUS with different methods of operation. So it is impractical to incorporate necessary logic within processor to control different types of devices.
- ③ data format in peripherals differs from data format in CPU and memory.

Due to above reasons, computer system includes I/O interface between peripherals & CPU to synchronise and supervise all I/O transfer.
