Topic :Abstract Writing

Q.4.What is an abstract? What are the methods to write an effective abstract? Discuss in short the key features and main types of an abstract.

Definition of abstract: The word abstract comes from the Latin abstractum, which means a condensed form of a longer piece of writing. An abstract is a short summary of a longer work such as a research paper or dissertation. According to Carole Slade an abstract is “a concise summary of the entire paper” Abstracts are important parts of reports and research papers and sometimes academic assignments. An abstract concisely reports the aims and outcomes of a research so that readers know exactly what the paper is about. There are two main types of abstract: the (1) Descriptive and the (2) Informative abstract. The type of abstract depends on the discipline area.

Methods to write an effective abstract

1. First of all the paper or report should be read and re-read carefully for an overview. Then each section should be read and the information should be condensed in each down to 1-2 sentences.
2. Next these sentences should be read again to ensure that they cover the major points in the paper.
3. It should be ensured that something has been written for each of the key points outlined above for either the descriptive or informative abstract. Each sentence should clearly communicate one main point.
4. The word length should be checked and the words should be reduced, if necessary by cutting out unnecessary words or rewriting some of the sentences into a single, more succinct sentence.
5. Finally it should be edited for flow and expression.

Key features of an effective abstract

1. A good abstract has one well-developed paragraph that is coherent and concise, and is able to stand alone as a unit of information.
2. It covers all the essential academic elements of the full-length paper, namely the background (the motivation behind research), purpose, focus, methods, results i.e findings and conclusions (implication of research)
3. It should only include information that can be found in the main text.
4. It is written in plain English and is understandable to a wider audience, as well as to discipline-specific readers.
