

Waves & Energy Transfer

- both particles & waves can transmit energy
- particles change position to transmit energy ---> waves do not

Definition: Mechanical Waves - those consisting of periodic motion of matter
-i.e. sound or water waves
-require a material medium

Definition: Electromagnetic Waves - those that consist of oscillating electric and magnetic fields that move at the speed of light through space
-i.e. light, radio and x-rays

Definition: Matter wave - wave-like behavior of particles, such as electrons
-use quantum mechanics to describe it

3 types of mechanical waves:

1. Transverse wave - causes particles in medium to vibrate to the direction of motion
i.e. piano and guitar strings
2. Longitudinal Waves - causes particles in a medium to move to the direction of the wave
i.e. sound wave; fluids, liquids and gases usually transmit only longitudinal waves

The subsequent direction of motion of individual particles of a medium is the same as the direction of vibration of the source of the disturbance.

3. Surface Waves - a mixture of transverse and longitudinal waves
i.e. movement of water at its surface

Definition: Wave Pulse - a single disturbance that travels through a medium
-each point along wave eventually comes to rest

Definition: Traveling Wave - one which moves as a periodic, repetitious disturbance in a medium
-displays continuous simple harmonic motion
-each point along wave vibrates regularly
