

Climate Change Science White Paper
U.S. Department of Agriculture
Research, Education and Economics
Office of the Chief Scientist
July 24, 2012

There is considerable science-based evidence that the global climate is changing, with increasing overall temperatures, increasing carbon dioxide (CO₂) and other greenhouse gases (GHGs), and altered patterns of precipitation (Backlund et al., 2008). Most of the observed increase in global average temperatures since the mid-20th century is very likely due to the observed increase in anthropogenic GHG concentrations (Pachauri & Reisinger, 2007). The average temperature in the United States has risen more than 2°F over the past 50 years and is projected to rise more in the future; how much more depends primarily on the amount of heat-trapping gases will be emitted and how sensitive the climate will be to those emissions (Karl et al., 2009). Furthermore, patterns of land use, agriculture, forestry, and grazing land management in the United States and globally are shaped by and contribute to climate.

A 2008 assessment by the U.S. Climate Change Science Program makes clear the scope of the challenge climate change presents to agriculture (Backlund et al., 2008). Among that report's overarching conclusions, three assessed as being very likely are among the most important and demand preparation by the agricultural sector:

- Climate changes—temperature increases, increasing CO₂ levels, and altered patterns of precipitation—are already affecting U.S. water resources, agriculture, land resources, and biodiversity.
- Climate change will continue to have significant effects on these resources over the next few decades and beyond.
- The effects of climate change on ecosystems will affect the services that ecosystems provide, such as purifying water and removing carbon from the atmosphere, but we do not yet possess sufficient understanding to project the timing, magnitude, and consequences of many of these effects.

Thus, climate change introduces major uncertainties into the planet's current and future capacity to produce food, feed, fiber, and fuel for the ever-growing population. Furthermore, agriculture produces approximately 10–12 percent of the world's total anthropogenic GHGs (2005 figures; Smith et al. 2007). In the interest of stabilizing global climate as well as limiting losses of carbon from agriculture in the interest of production efficiency, the capacity to produce agricultural commodities must not be accompanied by proportional increases in GHG emissions from agricultural production systems. The ability of the agricultural sector in countries around the world to produce sufficient commodities for humanity without increasing the GHG footprint depends on the scientific community's ability to produce new information and technologies that reduce climate-related production uncertainties and provide production methods and tools to support production decisions on a scale from individual farms to the global landscape and economy.

Current State of the Science

In 2002, the United States produced crops and livestock worth approximately $200 billion in a wide array of environments and soil types (Backlund et al., 2008). At the same time, agriculture
