

Climates and Biomes (continued)

b. Where would extremes in temperature be expected?

c. Where would the most precipitation be expected?

d. Where would precipitation likely fall as "Lake Effect" snow?

PART III. MOUNTAIN EFFECTS

The most obvious mountain effect on climate is the elevation effect. As elevation increases, average temperature decreases.

a. Would you expect Seattle or Snoqualmie Pass to have a higher annual average temperature?

b. How is altitude on a mountain similar to the effect of latitude in Part I?

When moist air from over the ocean is blown inland toward a mountainous area, the air is pushed up by the mountain and cooled. Cooling causes condensation and so rain or snow falls on the mountainside close to the ocean. By the time the air moves over the top of the mountain, it has lost its moisture. Moving down the other side of the mountain, the air is warmed. It becomes a warm, dry wind.

c. Which place shown in Figure 3 would have the greatest annual precipitation?
