Hagemann, Anjenette Kirk, Mina Busch, Leslie Korbee, Jaime A. Arango, Paul Braunschweiger, Margaret Rankovic, Daniel Smith, 2015-06-01 CITI Program's Clinical Research Coordinator CRC Guide provides clinical research professionals with information on operational and regulatory elements necessary for the ethical conduct of clinical trials. Information presented in this guide expands beyond but is directly connected to elements of Human Subjects Research HSR and Good Clinical Practice GCP. Readers may find this guide most helpful if they have an understanding of these areas as it will provide a foundation for many of the concepts, ideas, and considerations presented. Each chapter consists of foundational text supplemented by a number of case studies and resources which are intended to help readers conceptualize and establish a greater understanding of the topic being discussed. Readers seeking further resources may access a resource database for clinical research professionals by signing up for the CITI Program's online CRC course. The resource database presented as a module outlines and provides links to various tools such as job aids, templates, reporting forms, and guidance. FDA forms, best practices, federal regulations, international resources, ethical codes, and more. It is our hope that the content presented within this guide is operational in nature and will empower readers to perform their roles in clinical research efficiently and with confidence.
