Short Answer

16. whether planting seedlings in different types of soil will affect the growth rate of the plants
17. independent variable: soil type; dependent variable: plant height at 10 days; constants include: type of seedling, light, water, container.
18. qualitative: soil appearance; quantitative: height of plant
19. Answers will vary, and might include type or size of container, watering schedule, amount of light, type of seedling, and so on.
20. No, because a theory must be supported by a large amount of data and account for a large number of observations.
21. Beak size and shape would influence what the bird is able to eat and how successful it will be in a particular environment. Successful adaptations are passed on to future generations.
22. The beaks provide an advantage to the individual, which increases the chances of the individual surviving and reproducing. The successful adaptation is passed on to future generations and gradually becomes more common in a population.
23. Beaks are adapted for food types specific to particular habitats.
24. Yes, because birds that eat insects would be very successful on such an island, and the trait would be passed on.
25. More similar; the different finch species evolved gradually.
