

Chapters 6-7 Quiz- Nutrition

1. Although many people may not be meeting recommended nutritional guidelines for optimal health, it is not always necessary for people to take a vitamin supplement. Which individual is least likely to need a vitamin supplement?

Pregnant teenager

Adult on a very low-calorie diet

Moderately active adult

Older adult woman living alone

Rationale:

It is recommended that certain populations take supplements to ensure they are getting adequate nutrition to prevent deficiencies. These include women who are pregnant, dieters who consume fewer than 1200 calories, vegans, finicky eaters, and a large portion of adults age 51 years and older. A moderately active adult who does not fit any of those categories is less likely to require supplementation.

2. While providing nutritional counseling to a client, the nurse explains that vitamins are sometimes added to foods for non-nutritive purposes. When providing examples, what vitamin would the nurse identify as being added to frozen fish to help prevent it from becoming rancid?

Vitamin E

Vitamin A

Beta-carotene

Vitamin C

Rationale:

Vitamins are often used as food additives to boost nutritional content. In some cases, though vitamins are added to help preserve quality, such as vitamin C added to frozen fish to help prevent rancidity and to luncheon meats to stabilize the red color. Vitamin E helps retard rancidity to vegetable oils, and beta-carotene adds color to margarine.

3. While teaching a nutrition class, the nurse explains the role some plant compounds play in preventing illnesses transmitted by bacteria and viruses. What compound will the nurse identify as performing that role?
