

Assuming all the above levels of defense are applied, a significant reduction in malware can be achieved with ProxySG and SCWF alone. However, the solution is complete without leveraging the billions of dollars spent each year by the antivirus industry on signature and heuristic based defenses. This is available via the Blue Coat ProxyKit.

Blue Coat recommends that all objects be subjected to such scanning regardless of their source or origin, or file type. The ProxySG to ProxyAF solution makes this workable via the "scan once, serve many" technology. Each time a browser request is received, the ProxySG checks its object store for a cached copy. If one is found that was analyzed with the most recent AF-Auristics engine version, it can be delivered immediately. If the object is either new, analyzed before an update to the AF-Auristics engine, then the object is re-analyzed before delivery to the user. For non-cacheable objects, a finger print cache is kept to avoid analyzing the same file on frequent requests. Once an AF-Auristics engine update occurs, the finger print cache for non-cacheable objects resets. Note that ProxySG has four versions for analysis: it can scan, block, fast, block fast or skip scan for long load objects.
