Abstract—A large number of studies have shown that the use of a computer mouse is associated with musculoskeletal problems. However, the use of a computer mouse is not the only way to interact with a computer. This paper presents a study of the use of a computer mouse and a touchpad. The study was conducted with 10 participants who used a computer mouse and a touchpad for a period of 4 weeks. The results of the study show that the use of a touchpad is associated with a lower risk of musculoskeletal problems compared to the use of a computer mouse. The study also found that the use of a touchpad is associated with a higher level of accuracy and a lower level of error compared to the use of a computer mouse. The study concludes that the use of a touchpad is a more ergonomic and accurate way to interact with a computer compared to the use of a computer mouse.
