Pinar, William M. Reynolds, 2015-10 Studies of curriculum as phenomenological and deconstructed texts present the multivocality multiperspectivity and lived aspects of textbooks and of classrooms Such studies resemble imaginative fiction more than the reviews of the journalist art critic or the numbers of the quantitative researcher Such studies will not function as evaluations of course or pretend to be the truth in some final contextless sense However in the project to understand the curriculum phenomenology and post structuralism play interesting important and controversial roles This collection of essays composed by leading phenomenological and post structuralist scholars portrays these roles page 7 The Curriculum Challenge of Our Times George William Denmark, 196? Melody and Counterpoint in Primary Designs William S.
