An Account Of A Female Slave Martha Griffith Browne, 2014-04-24 Another example of the fictitious slave narrative is this book An Account of a Female Slave 1857 which suggests the narrative only in title Although no convincing proof is offered that the book deals with fact and the names of places in the story are not spelled in full there is an elaborate plot with climax and abundant subaction a conspicuous effort at literary finish is discernible all evidences that the book is not the unpretentious record of truth it purports to be Moreover the author was considerably influenced by Uncle Tom s Cabin Except for his sex John Peterkin is an other little Eva he has the same excessively precocious and angelic nature he talks in the same wise and prophetic strain and he also fades away and dies a flower too good for this wicked and slavery cursed world Everywhere there is an abundance of sentimentality much weeping sighing poetizing affected expression of feeling Even the slaves are sentimental especially the almost white heroine who speaks of watering the lovely flowers with her tears as though this were nothing out of the ordinary and who preserves as her chief and dearest treasure the note her lover wrote before killing himself to escape slavery history The word had penetrated to religious circles at the time but it was still interpreted with a free personal translation Perhaps there is no greater curiosity of its kind than that of a group of theological students chiefly in their junior year discussing science It is not certain that the tendencies of the Seminary club dinner are not in themselves materialistic The great law of denial belongs to the powerful forces of life whether the case be one of coolish baked beans or an unrequited affection That the thing we have not is the thing we would have neither you nor I nor the junior may deny and it is quite probable that these young men set an undue value upon a game dinner and entr es which was not without its reactionary effect upon their philosophy
