

PART A: CORPORATE GOVERNANCE SUCCESS FACTORS

4.1 FINANCIAL FAILURE

POSSIBLE CAUSES OF CORPORATE FAILURE

- (1) Poor strategic decisions. Management fails to understand the relevant business drivers when they expand into new products or markets, leading to poor strategic decisions.
- (2) Greed and the desire for power. High-achieving executives hunger for more power and may attempt to grow the company in a way that is not sustainable.
- (3) Over-expansion and ill-judged acquisitions. Integration costs often far exceed anticipated benefits. Cultural differences and lack of management capabilities can also be problems.
- (4) Dominant CEO. Boards in some cases become complacent and not adequately supervise the CEO.
- (5) Failure of internal controls. Internal control may relate to complex and unclear organisational structures and failure to identify and manage operational risks. This can lead to gaps in information flow, control and risk management systems.
- (6) Ineffective boards. Directors can become financially obligated to management, which can impede their judgment.

Cash flow: Asia Securities are more likely to fail because of poor cash flow than poor sales. „Mutual Credit Securities (Bankers) Pty Ltd, which offers interest-free prepaid computers in the event of bad debts to their „debitors“ first, reported a significant rise in the number of claims against bad debtors following the global financial crisis (GFC), indicating businesses were not prepared for the slowdown in the economy, resulting in a crisis in cash flows.

Corporate culture has also been identified as a significant factor in corporate failure, for wrong innovations, suppliers, customers, and even directly own employees ...

Agency theory there has been significant abuse, not just by the directors, but by all involved in the corporate governance process. This includes incompetence and negligence as well as corruption by managers and directors as well as other players including accountants, analysts and lawyers, economists and bankers, and more stakeholders.

The risk management systems have failed in many cases due to corporate governance procedures rather than the inadequacy of corporate models closer. Information about exposures is a matter of confidentiality of much the board as of more senior levels of management, while risk management was actively rather than enterprise based. In other cases, boards had approved strategy but did not monitor its implementation.

Corporate Backlogs about foreseeable risk factors and about the systems in place for monitoring and managing risk have also left a lot to be desired.

Accounting standards and regulatory requirements have also proved insufficient to cover areas leading to relevant standard either to undertake a review.

Board oversight and robust risk management is checking reference to widely accepted standards is not limited to financial institutions. It is also as essential, but often neglected, governance aspect in large, complex non-financial companies.

Potential weaknesses in board composition and competence have been apparent for some time and widely debated. The remuneration of boards and senior management also remains a highly controversial issue in many OECD countries.
