

Greek Results in the FCE and CPE Exams: Explanations and Solutions

© 1999/2002 Costas Gabrielatos

This article is based on my response to a survey carried out by ELT News, which invited teacher educators in Greece to offer their views on the reasons behind the extremely low rate of success of Greek candidates taking the FCE and CPE examinations of the University of Cambridge Local Examinations Syndicate (UCLES; now Cambridge ESOL). The response was originally published in ELT News 127, September 1999. In the original version, I responded separately to the four questions asked by the editor; in this version (April 2002), I have re-organised and expanded my discussion.

BACKGROUND

The FCE and CPE exams of the University of Cambridge Local Examinations Syndicate (UCLES) are extremely popular in Greece. Nevertheless, the success rate in Greece is by far one of the lowest in the world: just under 50% for FCE and around 30% for CPE. In this article I identify three main reasons for this unfortunate situation: popular myths about the exams, misguided approaches to exam preparation, and syndromes ailing ELT in Greece. I also propose short- and long-term solutions to the problems.

EXPLANATIONS

Three popular myths

A large number of teachers, learners and parents in Greece seem to be influenced by three very popular ELT myths. The uncritical acceptance of these myths and their use to explain away the extremely low pass rate in both FCE and CPE are among the main reasons why little has changed in the way language examinations are approached in Greece.

Myth 1. Greek candidates are too young when they take the exams.

It is of course true that Greek candidates sit for the exams at a younger age than in other countries. On the other hand, this does not seem to be a reason for the low pass rate. My examination of the breakdown of the results according to age shows that in the FCE the 14-15 range has a much higher pass rate (more than 10% higher) than the 16-19 range, and a slightly higher pass rate (3-4%) than the 20-plus one.

Similarly, age is not a factor in the CPE. The 14-17 range has on average the same pass rate as the 18+ range. A closer look reveals that the 14-15 range has a higher pass rate than the 16-17 (around 5% higher), whereas the 16-17 range has almost the same pass rate as the 18-19 range.

¹ Why do Greek candidates underperform in the FCE? Why do Greek candidates underperform in the CPE? Why do results fail? What can be done to improve the situation?

Myth 2. Greek candidates take the FCE too soon.

The UCLES booklet on the FCE (1995: 5) states that "information from centres indicates that the examination is often taken after approximately 500-600 hours of study of English." Now, the usual short route to FCE in Greece is one Junior class and five so-called 'regular' classes of one academic year each (termed A, B, C, D and FCE), which corresponds to 750 hours of study. There is also a large number of candidates who follow the long route; that is, they do an additional Junior and/or 'regular' class (totalling 850-1000 hours of study).

It seems then that Greek candidates sit for the FCE exam after a much longer period of preparation than candidates from other countries.

Myth 3. Learners are ready for the CPE one or two years after passing the FCE.

Preparation time does seem to be a contributing factor to the CPE results. On average, Greek candidates take the CPE exam 1-2 years after they have succeeded in the FCE (250 hours on average). There are even cases of learners sitting for the CPE 1-2 years after they had failed the FCE! The main reason is that learners and/or their parents are anxious to 'finish with English' (as they put it) before the learners start their two-year preparation for the extremely competitive Greek university entry examinations.

On the other hand, it appears that Greek candidates are indeed encouraged to take this exam much too soon. Keeping in mind that UCLES has introduced the CAE specifically to bridge the gap between FCE and CPE, it seems that the average Greek CPE candidate doesn't have enough preparation to reach the appropriate level. In other words, most Greek learners sit for the CPE when they should be sitting for the CAE.

Popular approaches to exam preparation in Greece

My experience in running exam preparation courses and seminars for teachers points towards the existence of two main approaches to exam preparation in Greece, which I term teaching 'through' and 'for' the exam.

Teaching through the exam

Tests are used as the only teaching materials. Learners are asked to prepare (part of) a test at home; in class the teacher checks the answers and provides the correct ones. Correct answers are counted and an average score is calculated. The teacher or the students themselves keep a record of the scores in order to check 'development'. Tests or papers already dealt with may be set in class after a period of time so that the teacher can check whether the students have 'learned' the items 'practised' in previous lessons. The underlying principle seems to be that students should 'cover' as many materials as possible in order to increase the chance of 'knowing' the items in the exam.

Teaching for the exam

Teaching is geared entirely towards the exam. Every effort is made so that texts are as close as possible to
