Abstract Psychiatrists are increasingly asked to provide the effectiveness evidence of their practice. This introduction of a new paradigm of evidence-based practice is a challenge. While the evidence-based approach is well known, it is not always clear how to apply it to the practice of psychiatry. This paper discusses the challenges of applying evidence-based practice to the practice of psychiatry and offers some suggestions for how to overcome these challenges.

Abstract This is a conceptual and qualitative investigation seeking to understand the experiences of a sample of 100 adolescents with a history of sexual abuse. The study was conducted in a community-based setting in a low-income urban area in South Africa. The findings suggest that the adolescents' experiences of sexual abuse were characterized by a range of factors, including the nature of the abuse, the relationship with the perpetrator, and the impact on their lives. The study highlights the need for a holistic approach to the care and support of these adolescents, addressing their physical, emotional, and social needs.
