Abstract

This document pertains to the case study of Major Depression. The subject of the disorder was Mrs. RJ (initial instead of real name), 43 years old housewife and mother of four children. She visited my clinic along with her husband who informed that she feels burden on her shoulder and at the back of her head most of time, feel weakness, facing lack of concentration on her daily work, disturbance with loud voices of anyone specially loud voice of males, shivering of body without any reason. He also informed about her weak memory, negative dreaming which disturb her sleep, fidgety and restless most of the time, aggressive behaviour and sometime weeping and shouting without any reason. Before visiting my clinic she visited some psychiatrists for treatment because she had become very aggressive and started to throw things and whatever was in her physical approach. One of those psychiatrists recommended ECT for treatment but ECT only affected her memory badly.

Assessment made after taking semi-structured interviews from Mrs. RJ and her husband. In light of assessment and DSM-IV, Mrs. RJ was diagnosed by Major Depression Disorder.

Keywords: Major depression; Fear stimuli identification therapy (FSIT); Assessment; Treatment

Introduction

Major purpose of this particular case study was to reaffirm and prove the efficacy of Fear-Stimuli Identification Therapy (FSIT) on empirical grounds. It was also intended to use FSIT in order to eliminate the symptoms of Major Depression Disorder in which Mrs. RJ was suffering from as the therapy was already successfully used to remove the symptoms of various disorders in different cases [1,2].

Hypotheses: "It is expected that the FSIT method would effectively cure the Major Depression Disorder from which the above referred person Mrs. RJ is suffering."

Fear Stimuli Identification Therapy (FSIT): Fear-Stimuli Identification Therapy (FSIT) is based upon the perception that some of the incidents (mostly the sudden incidents) in the early age of a child become stimuli for fear instinct which cast negative effects over the personality of a child and become reason for one or the other type of disorder. FSIT investigates and digs out such events from a person's unconscious which play as stimuli for fear instinct. Whenever affected person encounters the events in his/her life resembling to the stimulus/stimuli the specific incident which has stimulated the fear instinct previously is recalled.

Method

Participants: Mrs. RJ (client)

Materials: No any specific material used in this case study.

Procedure: In the first two sessions semi-structured interviews were conducted with Mrs. RJ and her husband. Assessment was made in the light of these interviews and reasons/causes for disorder were dig out. DSM-IV was consulted to decide the nature or type of disorder.

In the subsequent of fifty sessions Mrs. RJ was asked to write on specific topics. Cross-questioning was carried out over the ideas mentioned in the writings.

Results and Discussions

Results: After diagnosis of Major Depression Disorder, treatment was started in the light of FSIT method. Five sessions per week were taken, in total fifty sessions were conducted. In the course of treatment, her husband reported about Positive behavioural change in different spheres of Mrs. RJ's life. Clinical observations during treatment also indicated a gradual positive change in his personality. The difference between pre-assessment and post-assessment confirmed precision of hypotheses and efficacy of FSIT. Feedback was obtained on weekly basis for a period of one month from Mrs. RJ's husband about any possible reappearance of symptoms of Mrs. RJ Disorder and this was confirmed that there was no recurrence of disorder's symptoms anymore.

Discussions: Before visited to the clinic, Mrs. RJ had already consulted a psychiatrist and was mostly treated by means of anti-depressants and ECT. This had no significant effects upon client's disorder. Anyhow this medication helped Mrs. M RJ to sleep little well, as she was not able to sleep before [3].

Prior to write about intervention/treatment, a brief description of patient's social and family environment is necessary in order to understand the main causes of Mrs. RJ's disorder.

Family history: Her father was employed in Pakistan Army in lower staff with low income level. Their family always faced financial problems but despite of their low level of income, her father spend

DSM-IV Case Studies Allen Frances, Ruth Ross, 1996 The final chapter titled Test Yourself includes a number of complex cases each accompanied by a brief discussion which allows the reader to compare notes with the authors Latent Bipolar

Disorder Taiane de Azevedo Cardoso, Ives Cavalcante Passos, Flavio Kapczinski, 2025-11-15 Latent bipolar disorder was first introduced to discuss cases where individuals with depression who have been unresponsive to antidepressant therapy were introduced to lithium as an adjunctive treatment to the antidepressants and when lithium was discontinued these individuals were at a greater risk of developing bipolar disorder This concept was later integrated into staging models proposed for bipolar disorder to describe the subset of individuals who present mood and anxiety symptoms and increased risk for developing threshold bipolar disorder Latent bipolar disorder has been discussed as a clinical dilemma given its complexity and researchers have emphasized that operational criteria for the identification of latent bipolar disorder are a major unmet need in the field of mental health Thus this book provides a detailed description of the current literature supporting the identification of latent bipolar disorder which will potentially help with the establishment of an operational criteria for the identification of latent bipolar disorder For instance the importance of using antidepressants with caution in young individuals with depression has been discussed however there is no clear consensus on how to identify this specific population that initially presents with mood symptoms e g unspecified mood symptoms major depressive disorder but is highly vulnerable to developing bipolar disorder The accurate identification of latent bipolar disorder has substantial implications for clinical practice This is because it is well known that the treatments for major depressive disorder and bipolar disorder differ substantially and the appropriate treatment results in a better prognosis This work will provide evidence based findings to help clinicians to identify latent bipolar disorder Edited by leading researchers in the field the book systematically covers the theoretical basis for the definition of latent bipolar disorder data driven findings supporting this definition challenges and future directions as well as clinical implications and recommendations for practice
