

Analysis of Food Dyes in Beverages

AP Chemistry Big Idea 1, Investigation 1

AP Chemistry Laboratory 1.1

Introduction

Students investigate a chemical sample containing one or more food dyes and separate the components using chromatography. They then identify the components using a variety of techniques, including colorimetry, and they compare the results of their experiments with known values for the components.

Objectives

- 1. Identify the components of a mixture.
- 2. Determine the concentration of a component in a mixture.
- 3. Determine the identity of a component in a mixture.

Background

Food dyes are synthetic organic compounds that are used to color food and beverages. They are typically used in the form of a solution, and they are often used to color food and beverages. Chromatography is a technique used to separate mixtures. It is based on the principle that different components of a mixture will move at different rates through a stationary phase. The components of a mixture are separated based on their chemical properties, such as their polarity and their ability to interact with the stationary phase.
