Abstract: Musical education hinges on students' mastery motivation and self-concept, which are crucial for effective musical learning. Despite the acknowledgement of their individual importance, the relationship between these factors within music education remains unexplored. Hence, this study aimed to investigate the dynamics of mastery motivation (MM) and its relationship with self-concept (SC) in the context of music education. A survey was administered to 139 Hungarian grade 7 students, employing a musical MM questionnaire, a musical SC inquiry, and the collection of demographic information collection. We employed descriptive statistics (IBM SPSS 23), a Rasch analysis (WINSTEPS), and correlational and regression analyses (R programming and SmartPLS4) for data analysis. The findings demonstrated that the utilized instruments were reliable and valid in measuring students' MM and SC in music education. This study revealed a strong positive correlation ($r = 0.778$) between students' MM and SC, with moderate to strong inter-relationships among various subfactors. Furthermore, comparisons unveiled significant disparities in musical MM across school levels, with higher MM and SC observed among female students. Furthermore, gender, a musical family background, and awareness of musical lesson usefulness were predictive factors for both students' MM and SC within music education. This study provides valuable insights for professionals and policy makers to enhance music education, nurturing students' musical growth effectively. By understanding the relationship between MM and SC and considering predictive factors, stakeholders can develop strategies that optimize the impact of music education on students' musical development.

1. Introduction

In the modern era, individuals have increasingly recognized the significance of music education, as it possesses the ability to communicate with people through three different voices such as the voice of music itself, a persuasive voice, and an advocacy voice [1]. Consequently, people hold music in high regard and acknowledge the necessity of providing their children with a solid musical education. To provide children with a solid musical foundation, it is crucial to consider the role of children's mastery motivation (MM) and its related factors.

Within the field of music education, there has been increasing interest in understanding the importance of MM which is crucial in children's effective musical learning lessons [2]. MM is a form of motivation that refers to the internal drive to attain and enhance one's abilities without being motivated by external or tangible rewards [3,4]. It is also defined as an individual's inherent desire that propels and sustains a behavior centered around mastering a difficult task, skill, or competency [5]. Numerous studies have been conducted to investigate MM as a potential factor that explains different aspects of academic accomplishment, student engagement, mental well-being, cognitive abilities, and future career

Teaching in the Life of the Church Darin R. Clements, 2025-04-28 I chose to publish my dissertation for two reasons First though quite narrow in scope as good qualitative research should be this research makes a modest contribution to the growing scholarship on Christianity in Cambodia Second this research makes an empirical contribution to the field of nonformal Christian Education from an Asian context in which Christians are a tiny minority As my literature review indicates the field of nonformal CE is dominated by a North American point of view which ironically is facing a general breakdown of historical CE institutions like Sunday school While much of the literature is useful in the Majority World it does not take into account the education levels educational contexts and social dynamics of places like Cambodia For example the findings from my cases indicate that nonformal CE in Cambodia has more in common with the Sunday school movement in the 19th century than with the functions organizational structures and teaching approaches discussed in current literature As I have presented these ideas in class feedback from students has consistently confirmed that my findings resonate with contexts across Asia Pacific Dynamic Psychology, by Robert Sessions Woodworth Robert Sessions Woodworth, 1918
