A People's History of Computing in the United States Joy Lisi Rankin, 2018-10-08 Silicon Valley gets all the credit for digital creativity, but this account of the pre-PC world when computing meant more than using mature consumer technology challenges that triumphalism. The invention of the personal computer liberated users from corporate mainframes and brought computing into homes. But throughout the 1960s and 1970s, a diverse group of teachers and students working together on academic computing systems conducted many of the activities we now recognize as personal and social computing. Their networks were centered in New Hampshire, Minnesota, and Illinois, but they connected far-flung users. Joy Rankin draws on detailed records to explore how users exchanged messages, programmed music and poems, fostered communities, and developed computer games like The Oregon Trail. These unsung pioneers helped shape our digital world just as much as the inventors, garage hobbyists, and eccentric billionaires of Palo Alto. By imagining computing as an interactive commons, the early denizens of the digital realm seeded today's debate about whether the internet should be a public utility and laid the groundwork for the concept of net neutrality. Rankin offers a radical precedent for a more democratic digital culture and new models for the next generation of activists, educators, coders, and makers.

Evolution and the Recognition Concept of Species H. E. H. Paterson, 1993 Hugh E. H. Paterson's ideas on species and speciation, the process of evolutionary branching by which new species are formed, have become increasingly important to an understanding of evolution. Over the last 35 years, Paterson has presented his research in a variety of scientific journals published around the world, many of which are not easily available in North America. Edited by Shane McEvey, Evolution and the Recognition Concept of Species brings together for the first time all of Paterson's work on species and speciation. In new introductions prepared especially for this volume, Paterson comments on each paper and describes its reception by other scientists. From 1956 to the present, Paterson has developed a widely known and respected research program on how speciation occurs. Paterson contends that speciation is not an adaptive process but a passive consequence of the adaptation of intraspecific bonding mechanisms to a new environment. The conceptual basis of his research has come to be called the Recognition Concept of Species, involving the Specific Mate Recognition System. Evolution and the Recognition Concept of Species provides not only a collection of original source material but also an annotated history of the development of a scientific idea. Evolutionary biologists, behavioral ecologists, ethnologists, animal behaviorists, ecologists, and systematists will
